About Compound Law

Compound Law is an AI-native law firm based in Berlin. It was founded by Marko Bradic, Mohit Tilwani and Julian Jantze with the mission to make first-class legal advice fast, transparent and predictable for companies. Since its market launch in February 2026, Compound Law has grown to more than 50 clients, from start-ups and growth companies to Mittelstand businesses and corporates, across 9 practice areas ranging from commercial contracts, data protection and AI regulation to intellectual property and restructuring. At the heart of the firm is Compound OS, its in-house platform, where AI agents prepare research, analysis and drafts and a lawyer reviews and signs off every result. Compound Law is a licensed Rechtsanwaltsgesellschaft and works at fixed prices agreed up front instead of hourly rates.

A system that learns from every matter.

On Compound OS, specialised agents handle intake, commercial contracts, data protection and negotiation, drawing on client data, contract templates, playbooks and the corrections made by the firm’s lawyers. Sign-off always rests with a lawyer, and liability stays with the human.

Every correction becomes a rule in the client’s playbook, so the next matter starts where the last one ended. Knowledge and data build on one another the way interest compounds, and the platform grows stronger with every matter. That idea gives the firm its name.

Compound Law is building the law firm of the future.

Most law firms now use AI as a tool: it summarises documents, and a lawyer still checks every line. That saves time, but the way the work is done and billed by the hour stays the same. At Compound Law the work runs differently. When a contract package lands on a Friday evening, the agents work through the night, checking every clause against the client’s playbook, flagging risks, proposing wording and preparing the deviation schedule and redlines. On Monday morning a lawyer reviews, corrects and approves.

Lawyers’ time goes where it adds the most value: legal judgement, negotiation strategy and the decision itself. Clients work with Compound Law as an external team, embedded in their own legal department or through a Fractional General Counsel, and reach the firm in Slack, Teams and email. Ongoing advice is available as a monthly or annual retainer.

The goal is a major AI-native law firm, with the depth of a leading commercial practice and the speed of a technology company.
